O.Reg. 191/11 Section 14 (5)(6): Accessible Websites and Web Content that meeting the accessibility requirement is not practicable

Guideline

There are situations where it is not practical to present content in an accessible format and documents have limited accessibility levels. Examples of such exceptions include:

- Mapping or GIS data;
- Engineering drawings or complex technical data;
- Legacy applications or data that cannot be updated or cannot be updated with reasonable effort/expenses.
- Vendor web applications where the municipality is unable to negotiate contractual obligation to maintain accessibility;
- Presentation content where rendering accessible would hinder the ability to achieve its intended purpose;
- Content that cannot be rendered accessible without significant impact; and
- External contributors may provide content which does not comply with web accessibility standards. Converting such document to an accessible format is deemed non-practicable.

This is not an exhaustive list and at this time there are no reported decisions interpreting the “not practicable” exemption; however, Accessibility Ontario (a training and development organization that helps businesses in Ontario understand and comply with the AODA) has provided its non-binding view that factors relevant to practicability may include:

- availability of accessible goods, services or facilities; or
- technological compatibility between older products and newer ones being procured.

2024 changes have been highlighted in green.

Website Compliance

It is important moving forward that the municipal website remains in compliance. This means (in general):

- If the content cannot be built into the webpage and has to be a document uploaded, the document (word or PDF) must be checked for accessibility and be labelled as such (i.e. accessible in the document title) prior to uploading.
- Form Builder is preferred to be used over uploading a fillable PDF (sometimes they can be tricky to make 100% accessible depending on the format they were created) – however, in some cases, a fillable PDF must be used and checked for accessibility prior to uploading.
- Keeping up with the best practices of editing website content (the web working group members have all been trained on this through the training in 2019). This
